WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

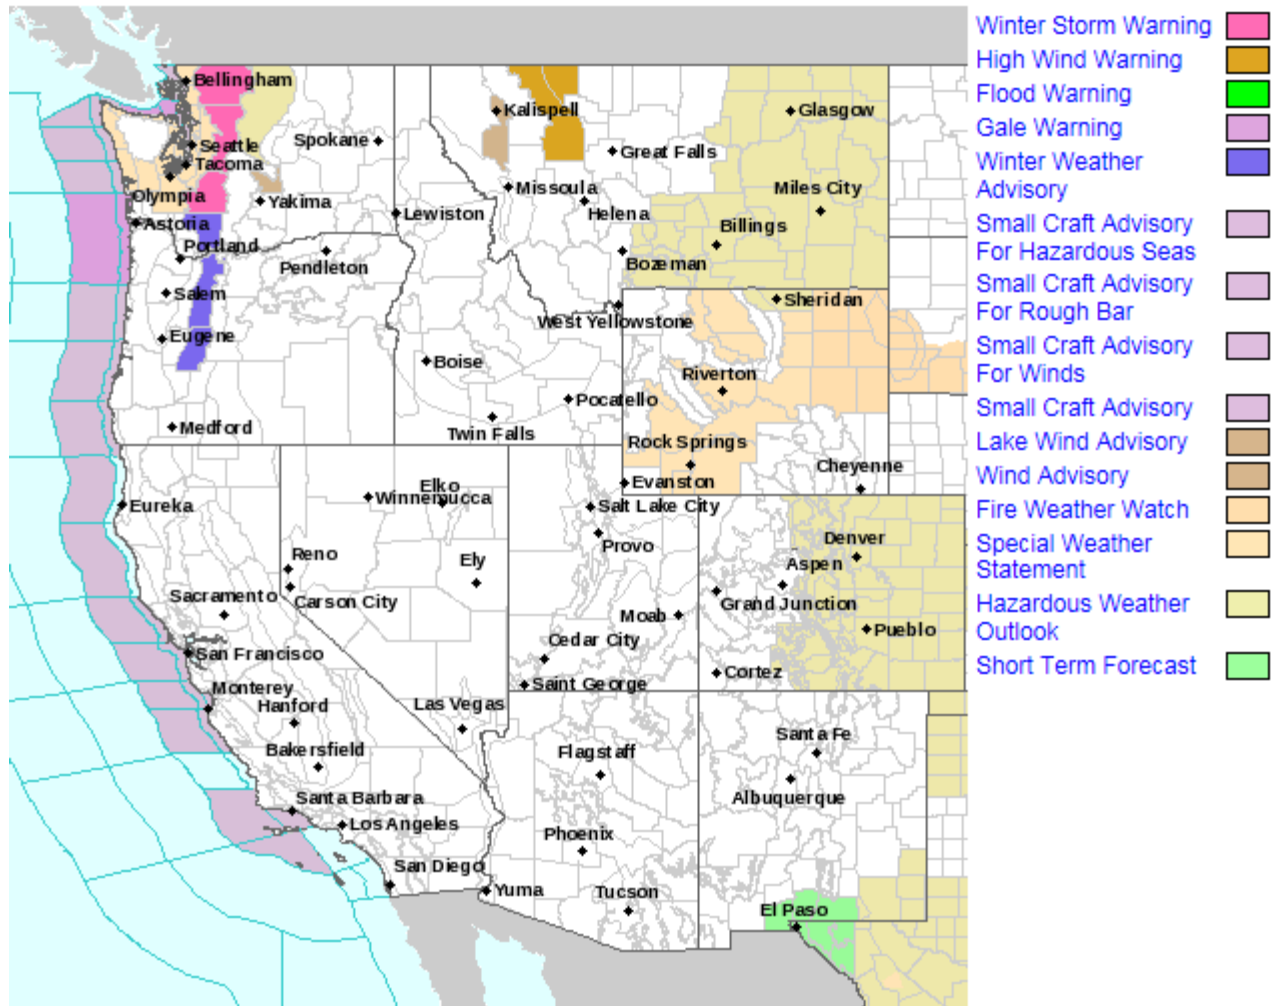

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Seasonably mild and dry today with weak high pressure over Northern California. However, a cold front brushes the area late tonight and Saturday and another late Monday-Tuesday. Both systems are bringing clouds, cooler onshore flow and scattered light showers, mainly to the northern half of Northern California. However, by the middle of next week, computer models are starting to build a stronger high pressure system which would bring a significant warming and drying trend for the entire area.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

An area of low pressure well off the Southern California Coast will bring a few degrees of cooling today, with 50s to low 60s in the mountains and mid 60s to mid 70s in the valleys. Temperatures will warm slowly Saturday through Monday as weak high pressure builds into California from the Pacific Ocean. The trough that will move into the Great Basin from the Pacific Northwest now looks as though it will only bring slight cooling to the region Tuesday. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 15% and 30% through Tuesday of next week. Strong high pressure will build into California bringing a significant warming trend and dropping minimum humidity to 12% to 25% Wednesday through the end of next week. Maximum temperatures are expected to reach 90 degrees over the warmer valley locations of Southern California by the end of next week. Winds will be fairly light across the entire area through the end of next week.
